

While we review the most useful applications for our readers at AddictiveTips, we also make sure to cover any major update released for them. An update usually contains new features as well as bug fixes for the old ones, which allow you to have a better experience of using the application. For instance, sometimes it happens that when you download and install a software, using its one particular feature will crash the program or make it go into the not responding state, and then an update comes along and the issue is fixed. However, if there are a lot of utilities installed on your computer, it is hard to keep track of the ones that need to be updated. Previously, we have covered applications such as AutoUP, which

, and allows you to download their updates. Today, we have another application for Windows called that lets you easily update installed applications. It is a portable tool which, other than providing you with updates to software installed on your system, also has a catalog of free software that you can download. More on Soft2Base after the jump.

The application is available in multiple languages, including English, French and Italian, and sports a very simple interface, with all the options available inside the main window. It tracks three different types of programs: installed programs that need to be updated, installed programs that are already up-to-date, and free tools available in the program database that are not currently installed on your system. You can also create profiles that allow you to check for updates for the same set of applications, so that you don't have to select them each time you plan to update them. The display filters can be changed from the menu available in the lower left corner of the main interface.

Once you click on the application, you will see the application details. Next, click on the download button and the download will start.

Once all the files are downloaded, they will be automatically installed and bring the application
