

Android's notification system is great for staying informed about all your phone and app activities and updates from anywhere in the OS, but what if you want to access this information without having to unlock your phone's screen? Notification LockScreen Widget allows you to do just that! We have seen the likes of DashClock widget bring a lot of extra functionality to the lock screen, but the AnyDash notifications extension for the widget only offered setting up notifications for selective apps, and had its own styling. Notifications Widget places real-time notifications of everything from your Notification Drawer into a very neat widget, complete with a handful of very useful customizable features.

Needless to say, you can place the widget on your Home screen as well if you want, but its purpose is to show you notifications on your lock screen. Since lock screen widget support was added in Android 4.2 Jelly Bean, the widget requires your device to be running that version or higher. However, you can use some lock screen replacement app with widget support such as Widget Locker to add the widget to the lock screen in earlier versions of Android.

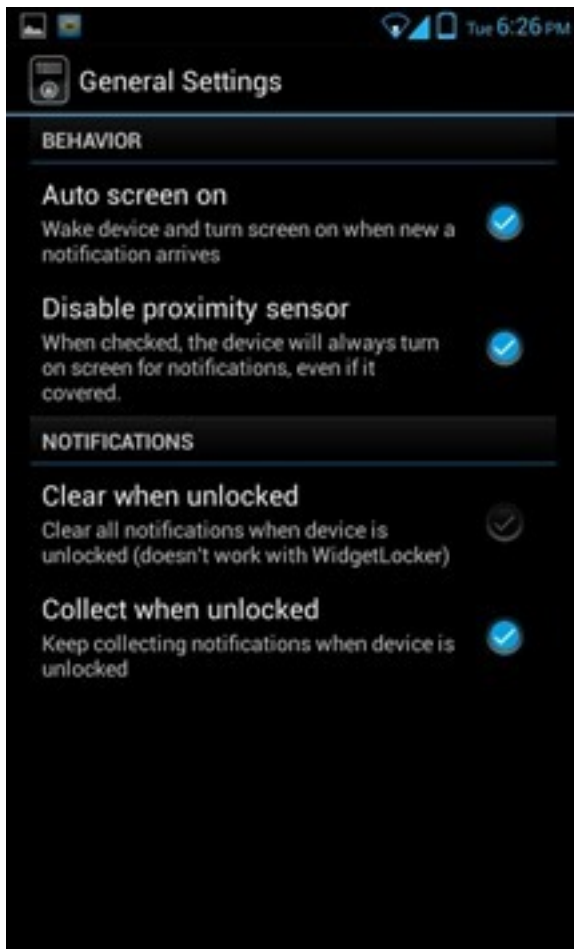

The screenshot shows the lock screen with a notification widget displaying a list of recent events and messages, including 'Saving screenshot...', 'Successfully installed "Textgram - Instagram"', '2 new messages', 'Foreign Policy Magazine', 'Missed call from HoMe', 'Message from NeMo3', and 'HaSsaN [Iqra]: Be there in 10'.
