

Remember Tempus, the Cydia tweak that turns the iOS lock screen into a fully featured music player ? Tweaks of this kind might appeal to some users, but others might label them pointless since you are losing the basic purpose of lock screen by adding too many controls to it. On the other hand, you have options like LSMusicGestures, which doesn't add any visible buttons the lock screen, but lets you control playback using gestures is a new tweak that is even simpler than LSMusicGestures, and it addresses an issue that we are sure most iOS users have faced at one time or another. Pluck adds a small button to the lock screen playback controls that can be used to access the songs and playlists present in the device's music library. This means you can start listening to the song of your choice without even unlocking the screen.

Pluck

How to Select Songs to Play Right From the iPhone Lock Screen With Pluck Hamza Ar